National Coming Out Day becomes a city-block celebration as Gipsy and Piranha unite for a blowout street party—christening The Fruit Loop as a historic landmark with DJs, drag, and wall-to-wall community

Welcome to QVegas Arrivals—your glitter-dusted guide to what's fresh, festive, and fabulously ours. As planes touch down and the neon hums to life, October in Las Vegas rolls out a rainbow carpet: this is our Pride Month, a citywide love letter to authenticity, community, and sheer showmanship.

This issue spotlights two must-dos that capture Vegas at its best—beauty you can wander through and flavors you'll dream about later. First, step into Bellagio's Conservatory & Botanical Gardens for "Autumn Majesty," a fall fantasia where golden leaves, whimsical sculptures, and towering botanicals turn the season into a stage. It's free, it's immersive, and it's a reminder that Vegas artistry thrives well beyond our marquees. Bring your camera—and a few extra minutes—you'll want to linger.

Then, tuck into Balla Italian Soul at SAHARA Las Vegas, where classic comfort gets a bold, modern kiss. Think handmade pastas, generous hospitality, and the kind of warm, come-as-you-are energy that defines the best nights out. Whether you're celebrating or just hungry for something honest and delicious, Balla delivers an Italophile's daydream with an approachable Vegas twist.

And because October is our moment, the party doesn't stop at the page. Gipsy and Piranha—longtime anchors of queer nightlife—are joining forces for a massive National Coming Out Day Block Party and the christening of The Fruit Loop as a historic landmark. It's a celebration of place and people, honoring the businesses, performers, and patrons who turned a few blocks into a cultural compass. Expect DJs, drag, dance floors in the street—and that unmistakable Las Vegas electricity you can feel in your chest.

Wherever you land this month—under Bellagio's golden canopy, around Balla's table, or dancing in the Fruit Loop—know that you're part of the story we're still writing together. Be loud, be loving, be exactly who you are.

Happy Pride, Las Vegas. We're so glad you're here.

Bellagio's "Autumn Majesty" Is Your Must-Do Fall Moment

If you're landing in the glitter and glow of the Strip this season, make Bellagio's Conservatory & Botanical Gardens your first must-do. It's free, open 24/7, and perfectly positioned for an easy wander the moment you drop your bags. The 2025 fall display, "Autumn Majesty: A Glamorous Harvest," runs through November 8 and it's everything Vegas does best: big, beautiful, and just the right amount of extra.

Designed by Ed Libby with Bellagio's ace Horticulture team, the Conservatory transforms into a golden dreamscape that feels like an autumn runway—think towering trees, jewel-toned botanicals, and whimsical storybook moments that flirt with fantasy. Start on the West Bed, where a 37-foot tree curls protectively around a moss-draped treehouse. Nearby, a Bacchus-inspired Colossus spills a cornucopia into a shimmering pond—an irresistible backdrop for couple selfies, friend groups, and that first "we made it!" Insta carousel.

Across the way, the North Bed turns mushrooms into couture. Poppy and mushroom topiaries—crafted from 31,000 fresh carnations—surround Queen Lilybrook, a royal orange-and-black frog presiding from her throne. LED walls pulse with color while a signature apple-cider fragrance subtly says "fall" without a pumpkin-spice shout. Love a souvenir that isn't a shot glass? Pick up the Bellagio-exclusive "Glamorous" apple cider candle at the Giardini Store.

The East Bed centers on a 23-foot pumpkin palace crowned with a shining Bellagio "B," its gilded canopy laced with stained-glass dragonflies and golden leaves. Pumpkin fountains feed a mirror-smooth pond edged in rusts and burgundies—peak autumn palette with a Vegas wink. Finally, the South Bed is cozy season incarnate: a 16-by-16-foot pumpkin house shelters a sleepy parliament of owls beside a gentle waterfall. Under graceful birch branches, carpets of croton, coleus, heuchera, and chrysanthemums create a lush mosaic sprinkled with hundreds of gourds.

Want to dial the fantasy up a notch? The Garden Table is Bellagio's exclusive dining experience set inside a grand emerald pumpkin—yes, really. Brunch by Sadelle's ($145/person) and dinner by MICHAEL MINA Bellagio ($195/person) place you in the center of the Conservatory magic. Reservations required.

Good vibes extend behind the scenes, too. The Conservatory uses on-site well water and recycled resort water (not municipal potable), and the display water is reused. When the season ends, plant material is composted locally—keeping thousands of pounds out of landfills and giving the desert's soil a boost. Glitter with a conscience.

A few fun facts to impress your travel pod: 700,000 leaves ripple through the display; the largest pumpkin tips the scale at 667 pounds; and you'll spot 10 dragonflies, 3 curious frogs, and exactly one very photogenic Colossus.

Whether you're here for a big queer night out, a power-brunch on the Strip, or a hand-in-hand stroll before hitting the Fruit Loop, the Conservatory is an effortless, inclusive way to slip into the season—no ticket, no wait, all wow. Welcome to Las Vegas. Start your fall fling under Bellagio's glass canopy, and let "Autumn Majesty" set the tone for a glamorous, golden getaway.

Mamma Mia, That's Good: Balla's New Menu Hits All The Right Notes

By Russ White and Ward Billeisen

Some meals are merely eaten. Others are remembered, retold, and dreamt about for days after. Our dinner at Balla Italian Soul, located inside the revitalized SAHARA Las Vegas, was emphatically the latter. It was an elegant, earthy, and deeply satisfying culinary journey through modern coastal Italian cuisine—equal parts tradition and innovation.

We walked into Balla with its airy Mediterranean glow and smart, unfussy sophistication. Our server, Daniela, greeted us with a warmth that felt more like being welcomed to someone's family table than seated at a luxury restaurant. She's the kind of server who remembers your wine from three courses back and casually drops knowledge about the dairy sourcing behind the cheese. A gem.

First Impressions: A Calm Canvas for Culinary Art

Tucked into a corner of the SAHARA's eclectic dining wing, Balla Italian Soul feels like an escape from the clamor of The Strip. The design is open yet intimate, polished but not pretentious. There's something cinematic about the warm lighting playing across terracotta tones and soft upholstery.

Bread Service: The Opening Act That Stole the Show

Let's get one thing straight: we did not come here for the bread—and yet, this humble start had us wide-eyed.

The house-made focaccia arrives with rosemary crackers, aged pecorino, a lush balsamic, and extra virgin olive oil. We added the whipped garlic butter, a light, fluffy creation that was neither overly rich nor sharp, but danced right at the edge of indulgent.

A standout surprise: the Warm Castelvetro Olives, served with citrus and spices. Served warm, yes—you read that correctly. It completely redefined our idea of what olives could be. Briny, buttery, and aromatically complex, they disappeared within minutes.

For the Table: Sharing Is Caring (and Delicious)

With a menu this inviting, choosing was nearly impossible. So we did what any seasoned food-lovers would: we shared everything.

Whipped Ricotta with roasted baby beets and pistachios had the airiness of mousse, sans the graininess that usually keeps Russ away from ricotta. It paired beautifully with the subtle sweetness of the beets and crunch of crushed pistachios. A drizzle of balsamico bianco gave it that perfect lift.

The Caesar Salad—while often an overlooked classic—was one of the most refined takes we've seen. Instead of the standard romaine, Balla uses sweet baby gems, smaller and denser, with a crunch that stands up to the creamy anchovy dressing and fresh dill. Bonus points for the delicate, briny white anchovies layered on top.

The Meatballs—a holy trinity of beef, pork, and veal—delivered a surprise twist with golden raisins. That gentle sweetness balanced the rich tomato sauce beautifully. We debated whether to ladle more sauce over the top... and then did exactly that.

But if there was one dish that came close to dethroning the meatballs, it was the Blue Fin Tuna Crudo. A sophisticated plate of raw tuna dressed with lemon, red onion, microgreens, and capers, it was like a deconstructed bagel gone glam. There was a subtle mustard note that brought the tuna alive without overpowering it. The result? A dish so refined and delicate, it made us rethink everything we thought we knew about crudo. "It's Italian sashimi," Russ declared after Googling it on the way to the restaurant.

The Pasta Chapter: A Love Letter to Italian Comfort

No visit to Balla is complete without diving into at least one of their handmade pastas. We, of course, tried several—but not without some expert guidance.

We'd been eyeing the Braised Lamb Mafaldine—a hearty-looking pasta with baby kale and demi tomatoes—but Daniela steered us toward the Tomato Casarecce instead. Her reasoning? We already had a heavier main on the way, and this would offer a lighter, brighter contrast. She was absolutely right.

The Tomato Casarecce, twirled perfectly with garlic, Calabrian chili, and basil, delivered an unexpectedly layered experience. It was tomato-based but not in the traditional marinara sense—it leaned on olive oil and aromatics rather than weight or cream. The Calabrian chili gave it a gentle heat, just enough to wake up the palate. This was a dish that proved restraint can be just as satisfying as richness.

Then there was the Truffle Macaroni, decadent with black winter truffles and caciocavallo cheese, and a textural dream that managed to feel luxurious without being too heavy.

From Land and Sea: Mains That Make a Statement

When it came time for entrées, we each had our eyes on different stars of the menu. Ward went straight for the Wagyu Short Rib. Braised for 36 hours, the short rib arrived cloaked in a barolo jus with accents of black garlic and pickled radicchio. It was a dish that required no knife—each bite surrendered effortlessly, melting into something between silk and butter. It was a soulful, stick-to-your-ribs kind of luxury that could easily anchor the whole menu.

Meanwhile, Russ yielded to Daniela's suggestion and placed his trust in the Mediterranean Sea Bream—a choice he had not expected to make, but one he didn't regret for a moment. The skin came perfectly crisped, offering a delicate crunch against the tender flake of the fish. A lemon butter sauce carried just the right amount of acidity and richness, cut with capers and served over a bed of wild greens. It was vibrant, clean, and quietly complex—a dish that whispered instead of shouted.

Together, these mains illustrated the versatility of Balla's kitchen: equally adept at bold, slow-cooked depth and bright, coastal freshness.

Wine, Cocktails & That One Banana Liqueur

Our drinks mirrored the meal—eclectic, nuanced, and refreshing.

Russ sampled the Villon's Paradiso, a cocktail made with cognac, banana liqueur, and chicory pecan bitters, served with a smoked pineapple ring. Despite banana not being a go-to flavor, the drink was smooth, complex, and shockingly subtle—summer in a glass.

Ward stuck with a classic: a glass of Montepulciano Spelt Riserva, deep and velvety, with just the right acidity to cut through the richness of the pasta and short rib.

Later, Daniela brought us a surprise cocktail to accompany our desserts, laced with chocolate and nutmeg—something off-menu, delicate, and delicious. We were charmed.

The Grand Finale: Desserts Done Right

When dessert arrived, we were full. But as any proper Italian meal teaches: there is always room.

Limoncello Panna Cotta, with its wobbly perfection and fresh berries, was light enough to cleanse the palate but rich enough to satisfy.

The Dark Chocolate Tart was divine—dense as fudge, with hazelnuts, mascarpone, and Nutella dancing together like an aria from Tosca. We took slow, deliberate bites and share with envious hesitation.

And then came the Gelato flight: Pistachio, Nutella Crunch, and Luxardo Cherry. Pistachio emerged as the dark horse favorite—pure, buttery, and not overly sweet. The Luxardo cherry option, however, won Russ' heart. "It's like having dessert and an aperitif in one," he said. Ward just nodded, already stealing a second spoonful.

Service with a Soul

It would be remiss not to highlight the exceptional service. Daniela embodied what it means to be not just a server, but a host. Knowledgeable, intuitive, and warm without being intrusive. She read our tastes, made confident recommendations, and curated an experience that felt tailored just for us.

We left with a warm hug of gratitude and a house-made Meyer Limoncello—sharp, fragrant, and floral—still lingering on our tongues.

The Verdict: Soul, Seasonality, and a Standout Experience

In a town where flash and gimmick often trump substance, Balla Italian Soul delivers something rare: real culinary soul. Each dish is thoughtfully constructed, drawing from traditional Italian roots while embracing bold, seasonal flavors. The menu reflects a respect for ingredients and a love for the dining experience itself.

Chef Shawn McClain, a James Beard Award winner, has created something special here. It's not just another Italian joint—it's a destination for those who want to taste, feel, and remember their meal.

Whether you're planning a romantic night out, a celebratory dinner with friends, or a solo evening at the bar with oysters and a spritz, Balla invites you in, fills your glass, and reminds you why we gather at the table in the first place.
