QVegas is available in print at over 30 LGBTQ+ establishments, community nonprofits, and partner advertiser locations, making it a vital part of the local scene.

Beyond the printed page, QVegas connects with readers through a robust digital presence—on the web, across all major social media platforms, in our dedicated iOS app, and through weekly email blasts that keep the community in the know. Our coverage spans nightlife, entertainment, politics, health, advocacy, and the everyday stories that make up the diverse LGBTQ+ experience in Las Vegas.

As an advertiser-supported publication, QVegas is the most effective way to reach LGBTQ+ locals and visitors alike—offering unparalleled access to one of the city's most loyal and engaged audiences. Red Dresses, Federal Rollbacks, and a Pool Deck Gone Quiet: This Issue Is a Mirror Held Up to Exactly the Moment We're Living In

There are issues of QVegas that feel like snapshots — and then there are issues that feel like a mirror held up to exactly the moment we're living in. This is one of the latter.

We open with joy, because joy is an act of resistance. On March 28, the Sin City Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence bring Red Dress 2026: Abra-RED-Abra to The Usual Place downtown, and we couldn't be more proud to spotlight the work behind the sequins. For 21 years, the Sisters have turned glamour into a public health megaphone — raising money through SADAP to help people access HIV prevention and treatment when other systems fail them. Last year's event raised roughly $40,000. This year, the theme of magical transformation carries an intentional weight: in a moment when trans lives are under legislative attack, Sister Prudence and the order want every person walking through those doors to feel not just welcome, but celebrated exactly as they are. That's not just a party. That's a mission.

That mission feels even more urgent when you read what we've laid out in this issue's deep dive on federal policy. Since returning to the White House, the Trump administration has signed more than 14 executive orders targeting LGBTQ+ Americans — stripping workplace protections, dismantling gender-affirming healthcare access, purging transgender identity from federal records, and forcing military members out of service they were proud to give. More than a thousand anti-trans bills were introduced in state legislatures in 2025 alone. The community is fighting back — in courtrooms, in Congress, and in the streets — but the daily reality for many trans and queer Americans is one of fear, uncertainty, and erasure. We will keep telling that story.

And then there's the quieter loss closer to home. Temptation Sundays — the Las Vegas Strip's longest-running LGBTQ+ pool event, fifteen seasons strong — won't return this summer while MGM renovates the Luxor pool complex. It's a practical pause with a real emotional cost. For many in this community, those Sunday afternoons weren't just a party. They were a ritual, a sanctuary, a place to be loudly and unapologetically yourself. It will be back. But this summer, that absence will be felt.

Red Dress. Under siege. An empty pool deck. This issue holds all of it — and so does this community.

The Strip's Longest-Running Queer Pool Party Is Taking the Summer Off

Temptation Sundays at Luxor goes on hiatus in 2026 as MGM renovates the pool — and the community is left wondering where to splash this summer.

For 15 years, Sunday afternoons at the Luxor meant one thing: the thumping bass of a DJ set, drag queens commanding a poolside stage, and a crowd of queer locals and tourists baking under the Nevada sun with a cocktail in hand. Temptation Sundays wasn't just a pool party — it was an institution, the longest-running LGBTQ+ pool event on the Las Vegas Strip, and for many in the community, a weekly ritual as reliable as the desert heat itself.

This summer, that ritual goes quiet.

MGM Resorts International confirmed that Temptation Sundays will not take place in 2026 due to an ongoing renovation of the Luxor's pool complex. The company says the event will return in 2027. For the first time in over a decade, Pride Month on the Strip will pass without the party that made Sunday afternoons a queer staple — and the community is already feeling the weight of that absence.

The renovation got underway in December when Clark County issued a demolition permit, with a commercial grading permit filed the following month. MGM is replacing the south pool at Luxor with an entirely new one featuring additional deck space. The company says the project is expected to wrap by July, but the timeline remains subject to change — meaning even a late-summer return this year is firmly off the table. Hotel guests can access at least one remaining pool on property during construction, with overflow access granted to pools at nearby MGM-operated resorts including Mandalay Bay, Excalibur, and MGM Grand.

What those alternatives won't have, though, is the history — or the intention.

Temptation Sundays was built from the ground up as a queer space, and that deliberate focus is what set it apart in a city overflowing with pool parties. Las Vegas does daylife better than almost anywhere else on earth, with resort after resort competing for the same sun-soaked dollars every summer weekend. But for queer visitors and locals, most of those options were never really built with them in mind. Temptation Sundays was the exception. It was the only pool party on the Strip that existed specifically for the LGBTQ+ community — a place where showing up loudly and unapologetically wasn't just tolerated, it was the whole point.

Over its 15 seasons, the event became synonymous with a particular kind of Las Vegas joy. The vibe was equal parts celebration and sanctuary: RuPaul's Drag Race queens gracing the poolside stage, go-go dancers owning the deck, DJs spinning sets that stretched well into the afternoon, and a crowd that ran the full spectrum of the community — tourists on their first Vegas trip, locals who'd been coming since the beginning, couples who met there years ago and kept coming back. General admission ran around $20, with discounts for locals and hotel guests, and for those who wanted the full treatment, cabanas could be booked for up to eight guests, complete with plush lounge chairs and a mini fridge.

The party drew especially large crowds during Pride Month, often serving as the centerpiece of queer celebration on the Strip during a time when visibility matters most. Its 15th anniversary season in 2025 felt like a milestone. This would have been the 16th.

The renovation is, by all accounts, a good thing in the long run. A larger pool deck, a refreshed complex, and MGM's continued investment in the Luxor signals that the property isn't being phased out — and that Temptation Sundays has a future on the other side of the construction fence. The new space may ultimately give the event more room to grow, with a bigger deck potentially allowing for expanded programming, larger crowds, and an even grander return.

But that doesn't make this summer any less of a void.

When pool season kicks off across the Strip in the coming weeks, one absence will ring louder than anything on the Luxor's quiet, half-demolished deck. Sixteen summers in, the party has earned a rest. The community will just have to hold its breath — and its swimsuit — until 2027.

Red Dress 2026: “Abra-RED-Abra” Brings a Little Magic to Downtown Las Vegas—And a Lot of Care to the Community

If you've spent any meaningful time in Las Vegas LGBTQ+ life over the last two decades, chances are you've crossed paths with the Sin City Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence—whether it was at a Pride event, a fundraiser, a bar night, a vigil, or simply an evening when you needed to see a familiar face in a not-so-familiar world.

This spring, the Sisters' signature fundraiser returns with a theme that's equal parts sparkle, spectacle, and intention: Red Dress 2026: Abra-RED-Abra, landing Saturday, March 28, at The Usual Place downtown. Expect a packed room, red looks in every imaginable form, performances that push the definition of “variety show,” and a dance floor that keeps the night moving—because Red Dress has never been just one thing.

But behind the fabulousness is a mission that remains as urgent as ever: raising money to help people access HIV prevention and treatment support when other systems don't.

Sister Prudence and the Sisters: 21 Years of Irreverence with a Purpose

“I am Sister Prudence,” says Billy Pierro—one of the founding members of the Sin City Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence. “There were seven of us when we first founded this organization. We're in our 21st year, so we're finally legal and can go drinking.”

The joke lands, but the work behind it isn't a punchline. For 21 years, the Sin City Sisters have built a recognizable presence in Las Vegas: white face, bold lips, towering habits, and a style of community engagement that is part theater, part ministry, and part public-health megaphone. Their core mission has been consistent—HIV and AIDS awareness, education, and support, with a growing focus in recent years on prevention tools like PrEP.

“About five years ago we started working with PrEP,” Prudence explains. “Because we want to help people—if they're negative, stay negative; if they're positive, stay undetectable. And those combinations help create a safer community for us.”

The Sisters are known for showing up when it matters, and for reaching audiences that traditional messaging often misses. Their approach is intentionally disarming: joy as a vehicle for truth; humor as an opening for hard conversations; glamour as a spotlight aimed directly at care.

Where the Safety Net Ends, SADAP Begins

At the center of Red Dress is a program many community members have come to recognize as essential: SADAP—the Sisters' support initiative that helps fill gaps left by public assistance programs and the realities of insurance.

Prudence puts it plainly: “Government levels break off at about 400% above the poverty level, which is around $65,000 a year that somebody needs to make. So we pick up right above that.”

That number surprises people—and it should. In a city where housing costs continue to rise and healthcare can be punishingly expensive, making “too much” to qualify for assistance doesn't mean making enough to absorb a medical crisis. Or even a steady medical expense.

“So just to put that in perspective,” Prudence adds, “that means if you make $65,000 or more a year, you get no assistance. And that means that if you don't have insurance, you are paying for your medicines by yourself—and that's about $3,000.”

That's the kind of number that can rapidly destabilize a person's entire life: rent, car payment, food, family obligations—none of it pauses because a prescription needs refilling. For the Sisters, that's where Red Dress becomes more than a party. It becomes a bridge.

Red Dress: A Premier Fundraiser With Real Results

Now in approximately its 17th year, Red Dress has grown into the Sisters' biggest annual fundraiser—and a cornerstone of how they fund SADAP.

“Red Dress is our premier fundraiser,” Prudence says. “It's how we raise our money because we don't get any government access. Everything we do is through raising money this way."

Last year, the event turned a profit of around $40,000, a number Prudence calls a big deal for the organization—both financially and symbolically.

"Being able to produce something at the level that we think is good for our community and fun—and also make a decent profit from it—is a really big deal," he says. "We only do that because we have so much support from our community...from the bars and the clubs and the organizations in town that help raise all this money and sponsor us...we're really fortunate."

Red Dress has become one of those nights where the entire community seems to converge—performers, nightlife institutions, nonprofit partners, first-timers, longtime supporters, and plenty of people who plan their look weeks in advance.

"Abra-RED-Abra": The Magic Is the Point

The 2026 theme—ABR Red ABRA—leans into enchantment, illusion, and transformation. But not just as an aesthetic. The Sisters want the theme to feel like permission.

"This year's theme is Abra-RED-Abra," Prudence says, "because we wanted to go with something magical. We're really calling this a magical transformation...we're hoping to inspire people to transform in any way that they want."

That includes the literal—drag, fashion, character, costume—and the deeply personal. Prudence is explicit about why "transformation" matters right now: "Whether that's transitioning, in this day and age when that's not acceptable and that's not celebrated, we want to celebrate it."

In a cultural moment when many LGBTQ+ people—especially trans people—are facing increasing scrutiny, restriction, and fear, the theme reads as both celebration and statement: you are welcome here, as you are, and as you're becoming.

The Evolution of Red Dress: Beyond "You Must Wear a Dress"

Red Dress has always been famous for one iconic expectation: show up in a red dress. But in recent years, the event made a significant shift—one that speaks volumes about listening, inclusion, and what it means for an organization to grow alongside its community.

"A few years ago, we stopped requiring a dress," Prudence says. "We still require a fabulous red outfit."

The change wasn't random—it was necessary. As the event evolved, so did the understanding that not everyone experiences "dress" as playful. For some trans community members, it was the opposite. There were transgender members of our community that were like, 'I fought all my life to not be in a dress,'"

Prudence's voice turns more personal here. "I always get emotional when I talk about this because it was a fight that I had to have within the order," he says. "I'm the president and I'm in charge, but we're very democratic, and some did not agree with me."

He recalls pushing the conversation year after year—refusing to let the tradition override the community's lived reality. "I remember telling them...I'm gonna be a thorn in your side every single year until I get my way on this one, because we're not listening to our community.' And I finally got my way."

Today, Prudence can't imagine going back. And the proof is visible every year: kilts, suits, high-concept ensembles, drag king brilliance, gender-defiant fashion, and the kind of red looks that make the room feel like it's glowing from the inside out.

"It kind of transformed it," Prudence says. "It has changed everything about Red Dress in such a positive way."

A Lineup That Feels Like Las Vegas (and Like Us)

Red Dress isn't simply a fundraiser with background music—it's a full-scale entertainment night, curated with intention and unmistakably local pride.

This year's host is Madame Mystery, bringing magic to match the theme: "She's gonna be our magician and kind of host extraordinaire," Prudence says, "and she's gonna keep the party flowing."

The performance roster reads like a love letter to the breadth of queer nightlife and stage art in Las Vegas:

- Andrew S., sword swallower (with America's Got Talent cred)
- Burlesque including Ms. Bronnie Beauty
- Drag performers Hanna-Barbera, Josie Cavallari, Kisa Diva, and Derek Daniels
- A Drag King showcase
- Piranha and Gypsy dancers bringing the club energy directly into the program

A key shift in recent years: Red Dress has intentionally leaned into local talent rather than chasing only out-of-town "name" bookings. Prudence notes that the idea of relying on big reality-TV names didn't fit the event's purpose—or its budget.

"Going local and having the people in our community support us—and the talent that we have in our community highlighted—I think has shown that that's really where we're going to find the success," he says.

It's not just practical. It's cultural. Red Dress feels like Las Vegas because it is built by Las Vegas.

What the Night Looks Like: VIP, Show, Contest, Silent Auction, Dance Party

The evening begins with doors at 7 p.m. and a VIP hour from 7–8 p.m. VIP guests get early access, dedicated entertainment, and food—courtesy of a longtime community partner.

"PublicUs has partnered with us for years now," Prudence says. "They put together a really great selection of...light bites."

At 8 p.m., the main show launches, taking the room through performances, crowd moments, and the little traditions that make Red Dress feel like Red Dress—like the virgin corsages given to first-time attendees.

There's also a Red Dress contest, designed around the theme and meant to reward creativity, interpretation, and commitment to the look.

And then there's the silent auction—always a cornerstone of the fundraiser side of the evening.

"We have an amazing silent auction," Prudence says. Expect bids on everything from Strip show tickets to staycations to nightlife experiences—"a night at Gypsy and Piranha...everything in between."

The night ends the way it should: with a dance party. Because even when a room is raising money for something serious, joy is still part of the medicine.

Tickets and VIP Options

- General Admission: $35
- VIP: $55

VIP tables tend to move quickly. At press time, some configurations were already sold out (including six-seat VIP tables), with limited remaining options in other sizes.

Want to Get Involved With the Sisters?

Red Dress may be the most visible moment of the year, but the Sisters' work runs year-round—and they're always looking for new energy, new volunteers, and future Sisters.

The easiest starting point is their website, where you can find volunteer info and pathways to deeper involvement. If you want to see how the organization functions behind the makeup and the mythology, you can also attend a meeting.

"We have two meetings a month," Prudence says: the second Tuesday at 7 p.m. and the third or fourth Sunday at 4 p.m. (a steady monthly rhythm). "People see the glitz and glamour...and don't realize how much work it really is."

The Hardest Part Isn't the Makeup

You might think 21 years of painting a full face would make the physical part the hardest. Prudence says otherwise.

"The hardest is...that I know what I'm going to be representing the community," he explains. "It means a lot. So I get a lot of personal information from people."

In today's climate, he says, the emotional weight is heavier than ever—people are scared, people are withdrawing, and sometimes the Sisters become the reason someone feels safe enough to be out at all.

"We're seeing people not want to go out," Prudence says, "that when they hear that we're going to be out, that's the only reason that they want to go out because they feel safe around us."

That's the true work: being joyfully visible while carrying real stories, real fears, and real needs. It's also why Red Dress matters.

The One Thing Prudence Wants You to Feel

When asked what he wants every person who walks into Abra-RED-Abra to experience, Prudence doesn't hesitate:

"Safe—and a sense of community."

On March 28, downtown will be drenched in red. But the real color of the night—the thing that makes Red Dress endure—is care. It's the reminder that glamour can be a fundraiser, laughter can be advocacy, and magic can be practical: a ticket bought, a bid placed, a donation made, and a person who gets to stay healthy because the community showed up.

Under Siege: LGBTQ+ Rights and the Trump Administration

Since returning to the White House in January 2025, President Donald Trump has signed a sweeping series of executive orders that have fundamentally reshaped the federal government's relationship with LGBTQ+ Americans. More than a year into his second term, the pace of policy rollbacks has not slowed. The past several weeks have brought fresh legal battles, new administrative directives, and growing anxiety within a community that has watched hard-won protections stripped away one by one.

The Gender Recognition Order and Its Cascading Effects

At the heart of the administration's anti-LGBTQ+ agenda is Executive Order 14168, signed on Inauguration Day 2025 and titled "Defending Women from Gender Ideology Extremism and Restoring Biological Truth to the Federal Government." The order officially recognizes only two genders — male and female — and directs all federal agencies to replace references to "gender" with "sex," halt gender-affirming care funding, and prohibit gender self-identification on federal documents such as passports.

The ripple effects of this order have continued to be felt. In February 2025, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention announced it would stop processing transgender-related identity data, a move critics say will cripple public health research into the needs of trans communities. The National Park Service altered the Stonewall National Monument's webpages, removing references to transgender people and changing the acronym "LGBTQ+" to "LGB." These symbolic changes have been felt by advocates as a deliberate erasure of history.

Healthcare Under Threat

Gender-affirming medical care has become one of the most fiercely contested battlegrounds. Executive orders have sought to ban federal funding for gender-affirming care for transgender youth under 19, deny coverage for transgender dependents of federal employees, and restrict access to hormone therapy for transgender veterans through the Department of Veterans Affairs. The VA announced in March 2025 that it would phase out gender-affirming services, with limited exceptions for veterans already in treatment.

Courts have been the primary line of resistance. Multiple federal judges have issued temporary restraining orders and preliminary injunctions blocking parts of these policies, finding them likely unconstitutional. Legal organizations including GLAD Law, the ACLU, and the National Center for Lesbian Rights have filed dozens of lawsuits. The litigation landscape is complex and rapidly evolving, with some injunctions being appealed and others upheld, leaving transgender Americans in a prolonged state of legal uncertainty.

Military Service and Employment Protections Rolled Back

Transgender service members have faced renewed expulsion from the armed forces. A military ban reinstated by executive order has forced transgender troops to either voluntarily separate from the service or face involuntary discharge. GLAD Law and the NCLR filed suit in January 2025 challenging the ban in a case known as Talbott v. Trump, securing emergency relief for some plaintiffs. However, the policy has continued to affect active-duty personnel, and advocacy organizations report that the human toll — in terms of careers, mental health, and service lost to the country — has been significant.

In the civilian workforce, a separate executive order revoked non-discrimination protections for LGBTQ+ federal employees and employees of federal contractors. The Williams Institute at UCLA has estimated this change strips workplace protections from hundreds of thousands of LGBTQ+ workers. TSA employees who are transgender have been barred from performing passenger pat-downs and from using restrooms that align with their gender identity — a policy that led to at least one federal lawsuit filed in early 2025.

Education and Young People

LGBTQ+ students have also been in the crosshairs. The administration moved quickly to rescind Biden-era Title IX guidance that had protected LGBTQ+ students from discrimination in schools and universities, reverting to the narrower interpretations enforced during Trump's first term. A separate executive order targeting what it called "radical indoctrination" in K-12 schools has sought to end federal support for diversity, equity, and inclusion initiatives, and to remove the non-binary option from civil rights data collection forms used by schools.

Advocates and legal experts emphasize that these orders do not override existing federal civil rights law. Title IX and Title VII remain on the books, and courts have long held they provide protections to LGBTQ+ individuals. Still, many teachers, school counselors, and administrators report a chilling effect — a reluctance to support LGBTQ+ students openly for fear of jeopardizing their school's federal funding.

A Community Mobilizing

In response to the sustained policy offensive, LGBTQ+ advocacy organizations have mobilized at an unprecedented scale. More than a thousand anti-transgender bills were introduced across state legislatures in 2025. In February 2026, Senators Ed Markey and Representative Pramila Jayapal reintroduced the Transgender Bill of Rights, a resolution intended to codify federal protections for transgender and non-binary Americans. Though it faces little chance of passage in the current Congress, its reintroduction signals the determination of allies to keep the issue in the public eye.

Legal advocates remain cautiously optimistic that the courts will continue to serve as a check on executive overreach. As GLAD Law has noted, executive orders cannot rewrite the Constitution, and the rights of LGBTQ+ Americans under it remain intact. But for many trans, non-binary, and queer people living through this moment, the law's long arc offers cold comfort. The daily reality — of passports that no longer reflect their identity, healthcare denied, or careers ended — is being felt right now.
