REVEREND WANDA FLOYD'S
MISSION AT LOVE MCC
A CHURCH THAT LOVES YOU BACK

Whether you're a local or tourist, we always feature our favorite spots along with all the new and exciting things our city has to offer.

This week we spotlight Reverend Wanda Floyd, the newly elected senior pastor of Love MCC in Las Vegas, as she revitalizes the church with inclusive outreach, community engagement, and a message of unconditional love. As part of the historic MCC movement, she champions queer spirituality, visibility, and belonging for all, blending faith traditions in a welcoming, affirming space.

Our "DEI and the Road Ahead" series features Russ White, current QVegas co-publisher and former co-chair of Apple's LGBTQ+ employee group. Russ reflects on Apple's early LGBTQ+ advocacy—including domestic partner and trans-inclusive benefits—and the enduring impact of the 2011 "It Gets Better" video on youth, visibility, and corporate inclusion.

A Church That Loves You Back: Reverend Wanda Floyd's Mission at Love MCC

Reverend Wanda Floyd has long believed that God is a God of love. It's a conviction that has guided her ministry through decades of service, activism, and community engagement—a belief deeply embedded in the DNA of the Metropolitan Community Church (MCC), the world's first denomination founded specifically to serve LGBTQ+ people.

Now, as the newly elected senior pastor of Love MCC in Las Vegas, Reverend Floyd is channeling that conviction into a renewed vision for inclusive faith in Southern Nevada. After serving the congregation for the past two years as a provisional pastor (a phase she describes as "dating each other"), she was officially voted in unanimously on March 30, 2025. Her installation service is scheduled for Saturday, April 19, at 11 a.m.

"A Church That Loves You Back"

Reverend Floyd's journey with Love MCC has come full circle. "I first served here from 2014 to 2016 as an interim pastor after the previous pastor left," she explains. Life then pulled her in another direction, but a decade later, after returning to Las Vegas, she reached out to her colleagues and said, "I'm here and ready to serve again."

Since rejoining the church, Reverend Floyd has brought not just pastoral experience but a wave of fresh energy. She has expanded community outreach through movie nights, events at The LGBTQ+ Center, Pride mixers, and even painting sessions with House of Pride. She understands that connection extends beyond church walls. "We try to find a balance between fellowship within the church and outreach outside the church," she says.

Under her guidance, Love MCC has grown, both in attendance and in spirit. Visitors are becoming regulars, and the church's small space is starting to feel a little too cozy. But Reverend Floyd laughs off suggestions to knock down a wall. "No," she says, "We're planning to move next year."

Rooted in History, Committed to Change

Love MCC is part of a larger story that began in 1968, when Reverend Troy Perry founded the Metropolitan Community Church in Los Angeles. "We were actually organized before Stonewall," Reverend Floyd says with pride. "MCC had its first Pride march in June 1968. Stonewall happened in 1969. So in a way, we were the very first organized queer entity in the U.S."

That early start set the tone for a legacy of activism. "Reverend Perry was a huge activist," she continues. "He once attempted suicide, feeling abandoned by God, but survived and heard God tell him: 'I'm not done with you.' From that moment, he dedicated himself to creating a spiritual home for LGBTQ+ people."

MCC became a haven during the AIDS crisis, when many mainstream churches turned their backs. "We lost so many pastors during that time," Reverend Floyd recalls. "Some cities had funerals almost daily. Women, including myself, stepped up to fill those roles."

MCC also pioneered globally recognized days of remembrance. "We started World AIDS Day," she says. "We also founded the Trans Day of Remembrance. We've always been on the front lines."

Inclusive by Design

For Reverend Floyd, the relevance of MCC today lies in its unwavering commitment to radical inclusion. "People still need a safe space where they feel loved by God just as they are," she affirms. "We provide that."

Her congregation reflects that ethos. From queer youth discovering their identity to elders who survived decades of rejection, all find sanctuary at Love MCC. "We've had people attend in drag, the Sisters of Perpetual Indulgence in full regalia, and even Wiccans and Christian Buddhists," she says. "As long as you come in love and respect, you're welcome."

Worship at Love MCC is a tapestry of traditions. Raised Baptist herself, Reverend Floyd brings structure and passion to her sermons, often following a traditional three-point message. Services include elements from Catholicism, gospel, contemporary praise, and more. "We blend styles so everyone can find something familiar," she says. "We even offer candle lighting, which is important to many faiths."

Love MCC also prioritizes gender-inclusive and nonbinary language. "I refer to God as 'God,' not 'He' or 'She,' though if someone needs that imagery, we honor it," she says.

Bringing Faith to the Streets

As visible as she is inside the sanctuary, Reverend Floyd is equally committed to presence in the community. "I'm on TikTok, Instagram—I go where the younger generation is," she says. At Pride, she dons a clerical collar and a "Free Pastor Hugs" shirt. "I get some strange looks—but I also get a lot of hugs."

One of her most effective tools for outreach is simply showing up. Whether it's Trans Visibility events, DEI mixers, or movie nights at The Center, Love MCC is there. "We bring cards, we bring love, and we let people know they are welcome, exactly as they are," she explains.

Even more importantly, Reverend Floyd knows that many in the LGBTQ+ community are still healing from spiritual wounds. "We teach a Bible-based lesson on homosexuality in the Bible at least once a year," she says. "It helps people understand that not only does God love them, but that they were created queer on purpose."

Queer as Sacred

Reverend Floyd is quick to acknowledge the evolving language and identities within the LGBTQ+ spectrum. While she grew up hearing the word "queer" as a slur, she's embraced it. "The younger generation reclaimed it," she says. "We need to take back words that were weaponized against us—just like we need to de-weaponize DEI."

She uses "queer" as an umbrella term for the many identities in the community. "It's simpler," she says. "I'm 61, and I can't keep up with all the letters! But I use queer with pride." Her associate pastor, Reverend David, prefers the word "tribe." Both reflect the church's deeply personal approach to language, culture, and spirituality.

The Power of Easter and Every Day

This year, Easter holds special meaning. Love MCC is currently working through a Lenten series titled "Everything in Between," exploring themes like righteousness and mercy, silence and shouting, grief and hope. On Palm Sunday, Reverend Floyd highlighted how Jesus entered Jerusalem to cheering crowds but remained silent. "He didn't say a word until he was addressed by authorities," she noted. "Even in silence, there's a message."

Looking ahead to Easter Sunday, she'll preach about the empty tomb—the grief it symbolizes and the hope it brings. "I love Lent more than Advent," she says. "It gives me space to be dramatic, to dig deep into meaning."

Vision for the Future

When asked about her hopes for Love MCC's future, Reverend Floyd doesn't hesitate. "I want us to be one of the major churches in the Las Vegas Valley," she says. "I want us to be seen, known, and respected."

She envisions t-shirts for church events, greater visibility at Pride, and ongoing outreach to those who still feel lost or abandoned by religion. She also remains committed to consensus leadership. "I'm not a my-way-or-the-highway kind of pastor. But if I need to put my foot down, I will—respectfully."

Floyd wants every visitor to feel not just welcome, but genuinely seen and heard. The church regularly holds open forums on fifth Sundays, inviting members to share their thoughts and shape the church's future.

The Legacy Lives On

Despite the challenges of aging congregations and shrinking denominational affiliations, Reverend Floyd is confident that MCC's message remains vital. "We're still here because people need to hear that God loves them unconditionally," she says. "And because too many still hear the opposite."

Her parting message to the LGBTQ+ community of Las Vegas is simple but profound: "Live in your truth. That's where your power is. When you live authentically, you tap into the life you were created to live. That's where joy is. That's where God is."

Prior to acquiring QVegas in 2012, I lived in Silicon Valley and had an incredible career at Apple. During that time, I was also the co-chair of Apple Lambda (now Apple Pride), the company's LGBTQ+ employee group for over seven years in addition to my "day job." One of the reasons this "DEI and the Road Ahead" series is so important to me is because of my work at Apple. Ensuring parity of benefits for Apple's gay & lesbian employees before same-gender marriage became legal, facilitating transgender benefits were a big part of that journey, but this week is the 14th anniversary of the Apple Employees "It Gets Better" video (and the 48th anniversary of Apple), and marks one of my final contributions to the company. Apple instilled in me the core values that I continue to live by today and I'm proud to share this history as part of our DEI series.

Russ White, Co-Publisher, QVegas

On April 13, 2011, Apple released its contribution to the "It Gets Better" campaign—a heartfelt video featuring LGBTQ+ Apple employees sharing their personal journeys through bullying, self-doubt, isolation, and ultimately, self-acceptance. The video was more than just a corporate message of support; it was an emotional lifeline to LGBTQ+ youth struggling to see a future for themselves. It was also a culmination of decades of behind-the-scenes efforts by employees who had worked tirelessly to shape Apple into a beacon of diversity, equity, and inclusion.

As we mark the 14th anniversary of this milestone, it's worth reflecting on not only the video itself, but the incredible legacy of Apple Lambda (now Apple Pride), Apple's internal LGBTQ+ employee group, and how Apple quietly set the standard for corporate inclusion long before DEI became a household term.

The Origins of Apple Lambda

Apple Lambda was one of the first LGBTQ+ employee resource groups in corporate America. Formed in the early 1980s by queer Apple employees seeking support and community, Lambda gave voice to a marginalized group during a time when being out at work could mean risking your career. The group laid the groundwork for a corporate culture where authenticity and acceptance were encouraged, not punished.

By the 1990s, Lambda was advocating not only for visibility within Apple but also for systemic policy changes that would benefit LGBTQ+ employees across the board. Their efforts culminated in Apple becoming one of the very first major U.S. companies to offer domestic partner benefits to same-sex couples in 1993—a full decade before same-sex marriage was legalized anywhere in the country.

Leadership From Within

Much of Apple's LGBTQ+ progress was driven from the inside. Employees who volunteered their time to lead Lambda brought relentless passion and quiet perseverance to a corporate culture that, while already progressive, needed structure to champion its diversity goals.

"Apple was one of the first companies to stand up for us, even before the world knew what LGBTQ+ really meant," Russ said. "Helping produce the 'It Gets Better' video was one of my final acts as co-chair. It was the result of years of work creating a space where we could be safe, be visible, and be proud."

A Broader Commitment to Inclusion

Apple's LGBTQ+ support was not in isolation. The company has long embraced a comprehensive view of diversity, including ethnicity, gender, religion, ability, and more. Apple has continually ranked high on the Human Rights Campaign's Corporate Equality Index since its inception and, earning perfect scores for its LGBTQ+ policies, partner benefits, and non-discrimination clauses.

But Apple's approach to inclusion goes even further. The company has invested in supplier diversity programs that ensure women-, minority-, veteran-, and LGBTQ+-owned businesses are part of its global supply chain. By using its enormous purchasing power to elevate underrepresented entrepreneurs, Apple has turned inclusion into a systemic, global business strategy.

Before DEI Had a Name

Today, we talk about DEI as a recognized field of corporate focus. But for companies like Apple, the work began long before the acronym. In the 1990s and early 2000s, Apple was already leading internal seminars on bias, creating inclusive hiring practices, and ensuring equitable access to professional development.

"Diversity, equity, and inclusion were part of Apple's DNA before there was a name for it," said Russ White. "We weren't doing it for publicity. We were doing it because it was the right thing to do."

That legacy continues today through Apple Pride, the modern evolution of Apple Lambda. The group remains a cornerstone of Apple's internal culture and continues to foster mentorship, advocacy, and community for LGBTQ+ employees across the globe.

The Enduring Impact of 'It Gets Better'

Through emotional, unscripted testimonies, Apple employees spoke of bullying, suicidal thoughts, coming out, and the indescribable freedom of finally living as their authentic selves. They reminded viewers that the cruelty of adolescence fades, that identity is not a weakness, and that joy, love, and community are possible.

One voice said, "If you're not around, you won't get to experience how much better it gets." Another shared, "Your uniqueness is your strength."

For countless LGBTQ+ people, especially those in rural or conservative communities, they saw someone like themselves thriving in a major company. It was proof that success didn't require erasure.

A Legacy That Lives On

Fourteen years later, we still live in a world where LGBTQ+ rights are being challenged. Visibility matters more than ever. The work is far from done, but milestones like Apple's It Gets Better video remind us how far we've come and how many people have quietly paved the way.

To every employee who spoke up, advocated for benefits, built community, or dared to live openly—thank you. Your work created ripples that continue to make life better for LGBTQ+ people inside and outside of Apple.

As we honor this anniversary, we do more than celebrate a video. We honor a culture of courage. A company willing to listen. A community that never gave up.

And for every young person still struggling to find their place in the world: know that there is hope, there is pride, and yes—it gets better.

Milestones in Apple's LGBTQ+ Journey

- 1980s: Formation of Apple Lambda, one of the first LGBTQ+ employee groups in the tech industry
- 1993: Apple introduces domestic partner benefits for same-sex couples
- Early 2000s: Apple begins inclusive employee trainings and internal diversity programs
- 2011: Apple releases its It Gets Better video as part of the national campaign
- 2014: CEO Tim Cook comes out publicly, becoming the first openly gay Fortune 500 CEO
- Present Day: Apple Pride supports global LGBTQ+ employees and continues Apple's inclusive legacy
