Dancing Under the Electric Sky: EDC Week 2025 and the LGBTQ+ Celebration Taking Over Las Vegas

Each spring, a wave of glitter, LED lights, and global sound rushes into Las Vegas, transforming the city into an epicenter of dance, self-expression, and radiant energy. This year, EDC Las Vegas 2025 returns with more power than ever before, and it's not just about the three-day mainstage extravaganza at the Las Vegas Motor Speedway. The heart of the celebration lies in the week leading up to it—EDC Week—where the city pulses with pre-parties, poolside soundscapes, and for many in our community, queer pride shining as brightly as the pyrotechnics in the desert sky.

At QVegas, we don't just observe the festival from the sidelines. We live it, breathe it, and this year, we're proud to play a role in shaping it. Through our partnerships with LE Parties, Ultra Load, Gypsy Nightclub, and Piranha Nightclub, we're amplifying the LGBTQ+ experiences that make EDC Week more than a festival – it's a cultural moment.

More Than a Festival: What EDC 2025 Has in Store

Electric Daisy Carnival Las Vegas runs May 16–18 at the Las Vegas Motor Speedway (7000 N Las Vegas Blvd). With over 200+ artists scheduled to perform across 16 uniquely designed stages, this is more than a music festival – it's a technicolor dream. From the high-octane energy of kineticFIELD to the experimental vibes at neonGARDEN, Insomniac is curating a world where sound, art, and spirit collide.

This year's big names include:

TIESTO, David Guetta, FISHER, Dom Dolla, Rezz, and Zedd

LGBTQ+ favorites like Masha Mar, Sequel, and Leandro Justen – proving dance music is, and always has been, queer at its core

But EDC isn't confined to the Speedway. It spills out across the city. And that's where our community comes alive.

Virgin Hotels Las Vegas: The LGBTQ+ Home Base

This year, Virgin Hotels Las Vegas (4455

Paradise Rd) is not only an official EDC partner, but also the unofficial heartbeat of the LGBTQ+ experience. As the host of Hotel EDC, Virgin is offering:

Curated room experiences

Exclusive shuttle access to the Speedway

Daily pool parties featuring artists like Tchami, Nora En Pure, and Walker & Royce

A perfect midway point between nightlife venues like Gypsy and Piranha

Virgin has partnered with our community venues because it understands: Pride is not a weekend. It's a way of life.

EDC Week 2025 isn't about choosing between the festival and the city's thriving LGBTQ+ nightlife. It's about stitching the two together into one unforgettable, affirming, and euphoric experience. From the Speedway to the Strip, from LED-lit stages to poolside drag, this is our moment to dance under the electric sky—loud, proud, and together.

Date	Day	Day Event	Night Event	After-Hours
May 15	Thursday		LE Parties: INTENSITY
May 16	Friday	Ultra Load Pool Party (Day 1)	EDC Night 1	Piranha: Fetish Friday
May 17	Saturday	Ultra Load Pool Party (Wigged Out)	EDC Night 2	Gipsy: Body Heat
May 18	Sunday	Ultra Load Pool Party (Wigged Out)	EDC Night 3	Piranha: Drag Showcase

The Queer Pulse of EDC Week: LGBTQ+ Events That Matter

Thursday, May 15

INTENSITY: Hyper Drive | Presented by LE Parties

Where: Gipsy Nightclub (4605 Paradise Rd)

LE Parties is known for transforming nightlife into full-scale production, and this night will be no exception. Hosted by Jessica Wild and June Jambalaya, with beats by Dan Slater and Jace M, INTENSITY will launch EDC Week with strobe-lit, glitter-fueled force.

Friday, May 16

Ultra Load Pool Party – Day 1

Where: Alexis Park Resort (375 E Harmon Ave)

Let's be honest: it's not EDC Week unless you start it half-naked by a pool with your queer family. Ultra Load is the only all-weekend LGBTQ+ pool series and includes DJs like Tony Moran, Orel Sabag, and Deanne.

That night, head straight to Piranha Nightclub (4633 Paradise Rd) for Fetish Friday + Latin Caliente, featuring international DJ Kidd Madonny and a midnight performance by Adore Delano.

Saturday, May 17

Ultra Load – Day 2: Wigged Out

Drag meets disco meets daytime delirium. Hosted by queens like Jorgeous and Kornbread Jeté, this themed party blends high camp with house music.

EDC Night 2 delivers some of the biggest drops of the weekend: Kaskade Redux, Chris Lake B2B FISHER, and Seven Lions.

Later, back at Gipsy, experience Body Heat with DJ Hector Fonseca.

Sunday, May 18

Ultra Load: Recovery Edition

We wind down in style with Ben Bakson on the decks, cold cocktails, and cabanas.

Then it's off to the final night at EDC – with Rezz, Zedd, and Dom Dolla closing out a weekend we'll never forget.

Piranha keeps the party alive with Sunday Service Drag Showcase, hosted by Desree D. St. James.

Mamma Mia, That's Good: Balla's New Menu Hits All The Right Notes

By Russ White and Ward Billeisen

Some meals are merely eaten. Others are remembered, retold, and dreamt about for days after. Our dinner at Balla Italian Soul, located inside the revitalized SAHARA Las Vegas, was emphatically the latter. It was an elegant, earthy, and deeply satisfying culinary journey through modern coastal Italian cuisine—equal parts tradition and innovation.

We walked into Balla with its airy Mediterranean glow and smart, unfussy sophistication. Our server, Daniela, greeted us with a warmth that felt more like being welcomed to someone's family table than seated at a luxury restaurant. She's the kind of server who remembers your wine from three courses back and casually drops knowledge about the dairy sourcing behind the cheese. A gem.

First Impressions: A Calm Canvas for Culinary Art

Tucked into a corner of the SAHARA's eclectic dining wing, Balla Italian Soul feels like an escape from the clamor of The Strip. The design is open yet intimate, polished but not pretentious. There's something cinematic about the warm lighting playing across terracotta tones and soft upholstery.

Bread Service: The Opening Act That Stole the Show

Let's get one thing straight: we did not come here for the bread—and yet, this humble start had us wide-eyed.

The house-made focaccia arrives with rosemary crackers, aged pecorino, a lush balsamic, and extra virgin olive oil. We added the whipped garlic butter, a light, fluffy creation that was neither overly rich nor sharp, but danced right at the edge of indulgent.

A standout surprise: the Warm Castelvetro Olives, served with citrus and spices. Served warm, yes—you read that correctly. It completely redefined our idea of what olives could be. Briny, buttery, and aromatically complex, they disappeared within minutes.

For the Table: Sharing Is Caring (and Delicious)

With a menu this inviting, choosing was nearly impossible. So we did what any seasoned food-lovers would: we shared everything.

Whipped Ricotta with roasted baby beets and pistachios had the airiness of mousse, sans the graininess that usually keeps Russ away from ricotta. It paired beautifully with the subtle sweetness of the beets and crunch of crushed pistachios. A drizzle of balsamico bianco gave it that perfect lift.

The Caesar Salad—while often an overlooked classic—was one of the most refined takes we've seen. Instead of the standard romaine, Balla uses sweet baby gems, smaller and denser, with a crunch that stands up to the creamy anchovy dressing and fresh dill. Bonus points for the delicate, briny white anchovies layered on top.

The Meatballs—a holy trinity of beef, pork, and veal—delivered a surprise twist with golden raisins. That gentle sweetness balanced the rich tomato sauce beautifully. We debated whether to ladle more sauce over the top... and then did exactly that.

But if there was one dish that came close to dethroning the meatballs, it was the Blue Fin Tuna Crudo. A sophisticated plate of raw tuna dressed with lemon, red onion, microgreens, and capers, it was like a deconstructed bagel gone glam. There was a subtle mustard note that brought the tuna alive without overpowering it. The result? A dish so refined and delicate, it made us rethink everything we thought we knew about crudo. "It's Italian sashimi," Russ declared after Googling it on the way to the restaurant.

The Pasta Chapter: A Love Letter to Italian Comfort

No visit to Balla is complete without diving into at least one of their handmade pastas. We, of course, tried several—but not without some expert guidance.

We'd been eyeing the Braised Lamb Mafaldine—a hearty-looking pasta with baby kale and demi tomatoes—but Daniela steered us toward the Tomato Casarecce instead. Her reasoning? We already had a heavier main on the way, and this would offer a lighter, brighter contrast. She was absolutely right.

The Tomato Casarecce, twirled perfectly with garlic, Calabrian chili, and basil, delivered an unexpectedly layered experience. It was tomato-based but not in the traditional marinara sense—it leaned on olive oil and aromatics rather than weight or cream. The Calabrian chili gave it a gentle heat, just enough to wake up the palate. This was a dish that proved restraint can be just as satisfying as richness.

Then there was the Truffle Macaroni, decadent with black winter truffles and caciocavallo cheese, and a textural dream that managed to feel luxurious without being too heavy.

From Land and Sea: Mains That Make a Statement

When it came time for entrées, we each had our eyes on different stars of the menu. Ward went straight for the Wagyu Short Rib. Braised for 36 hours, the short rib arrived cloaked in a barolo jus with accents of black garlic and pickled radicchio. It was a dish that required no knife—each bite surrendered effortlessly, melting into something between silk and butter. It was a soulful, stick-to-your-ribs kind of luxury that could easily anchor the whole menu.

Meanwhile, Russ yielded to Daniela's suggestion and placed his trust in the Mediterranean Sea Bream—a choice he had not expected to make, but one he didn't regret for a moment. The skin came perfectly crisped, offering a delicate crunch against the tender flake of the fish. A lemon butter sauce carried just the right amount of acidity and richness, cut with capers and served over a bed of wild greens. It was vibrant, clean, and quietly complex—a dish that whispered instead of shouted.

Together, these mains illustrated the versatility of Balla's kitchen: equally adept at bold, slow-cooked depth and bright, coastal freshness.

Wine, Cocktails & That One Banana Liqueur

Our drinks mirrored the meal—eclectic, nuanced, and refreshing.

Russ sampled the Villon's Paradiso, a cocktail made with cognac, banana liqueur, and chicory pecan bitters, served with a smoked pineapple ring. Despite banana not being a go-to flavor, the drink was smooth, complex, and shockingly subtle—summer in a glass.

Ward stuck with a classic: a glass of Montepulciano Spelt Riserva, deep and velvety, with just the right acidity to cut through the richness of the pasta and short rib.

Later, Daniela brought us a surprise cocktail to accompany our desserts, laced with chocolate and nutmeg—something off-menu, delicate, and delicious. We were charmed.

The Grand Finale: Desserts Done Right

When dessert arrived, we were full. But as any proper Italian meal teaches: there is always room.

Limoncello Panna Cotta, with its wobbly perfection and fresh berries, was light enough to cleanse the palate but rich enough to satisfy.

The Dark Chocolate Tart was divine—dense as fudge, with hazelnuts, mascarpone, and Nutella dancing together like an aria from Tosca. We took slow, deliberate bites and share with envious hesitation.

And then came the Gelato flight: Pistachio, Nutella Crunch, and Luxardo Cherry. Pistachio emerged as the dark horse favorite—pure, buttery, and not overly sweet. The Luxardo cherry option, however, won Russ' heart. "It's like having dessert and an aperitif in one," he said. Ward just nodded, already stealing a second spoonful.

Service with a Soul

It would be remiss not to highlight the exceptional service. Daniela embodied what it means to be not just a server, but a host. Knowledgeable, intuitive, and warm without being intrusive. She read our tastes, made confident recommendations, and curated an experience that felt tailored just for us.

We left with a warm hug of gratitude and a house-made Meyer Limoncello—sharp, fragrant, and floral—still lingering on our tongues.

The Verdict: Soul, Seasonality, and a Standout Experience

In a town where flash and gimmick often trump substance, Balla Italian Soul delivers something rare: real culinary soul. Each dish is thoughtfully constructed, drawing from traditional Italian roots while embracing bold, seasonal flavors. The menu reflects a respect for ingredients and a love for the dining experience itself.

Chef Shawn McClain, a James Beard Award winner, has created something special here. It's not just another Italian joint—it's a destination for those who want to taste, feel, and remember their meal.

Whether you're planning a romantic night out, a celebratory dinner with friends, or a solo evening at the bar with oysters and a spritz, Balla invites you in, fills your glass, and reminds you why we gather at the table in the first place.
