Whether you're a local or tourist, we always feature our favorite spots along with all the new and exciting things our city has to offer.

We hope you all had a safe and fun 4th of July. While the United States might not have us feeling so patriotic with the current set backs from the conservative Supreme Court rulings that target LGBTQ+ and communities of color, it's important to remember that this country belongs to everyone. Their actions only make us louder than a firework show.

That's why having shows like RuPaul's Drag Race Live! featured on stage, billboards, TV, and magazines is so important—to show the world that we are here and we aren't going anywhere!

Where other states are shutting down drag, this month, RuPaul's Drag Race Live! celebrates 500 shows on the Las Vegas Strip, bringing in queens from all over the world, and with it, global attention for our community.

The United States Supreme Court, with its recent landmark decisions, has undoubtedly initiated significant changes in the fabric of American society. These rulings, involving the refusal of services based on religious beliefs, the limitation on student loan forgiveness, and the ban on race-based affirmative action in college admissions, highlight a conservative shift that impacts various groups, including the LGBTQ+ community. Each decision carries wide-reaching implications, reshaping the national landscape of civil liberties, financial relief, and educational policy. This article will delve into the potential impacts and consequences of these rulings on the diverse sectors of American society.

Refusal of Services Based on Religious Beliefs

The U.S. Supreme Court has made a groundbreaking decision, affirming the rights of business owners to refuse services based on their religious beliefs. In a six-justice majority, the court ruled that Colorado couldn't enforce its anti-discrimination law against a Christian website designer who didn't want to create wedding websites for same-sex couples, as doing so would violate her First Amendment right to free speech.

Justice Neil Gorsuch, writing for the majority, emphasized that individuals couldn't be forced to speak in ways that contradict their conscience, a decision that could protect other service providers whose work involves speech, such as artists and movie directors.

The dissenting opinion, led by Justice Sonia Sotomayor, decried the decision, saying it marked a "sad day in the American constitutional law and in the lives of LGBTQ people."

This landmark ruling has significant implications. It reveals an ideological shift in the Supreme Court towards prioritizing individual free speech rights over the state's interest in preventing discrimination. This shift could potentially impact anti-discrimination laws and protections across states and various groups, not just the LGBTQ+ community.

However, the specific application of this ruling in future cases remains unclear. The ruling seems very fact-specific and may not apply broadly in all situations, especially for physical goods or services less clearly linked to "expressive activity" protected by the First Amendment.

This decision represents a pivotal moment in the ongoing national debate over the balance between religious liberty, freedom of speech, and anti-discrimination protections. The ramifications of this decision will likely unfold over the coming years, shaping American law and society in profound ways.

Student Loan Forgiveness

In a crucial decision, the Supreme Court has ruled 6-3 against the Biden administration's student loan forgiveness program, effectively stating that it overstepped its authority when announcing plans to cancel up to $400 billion in student loans. The administration's promise was initially made as part of Biden's 2020 presidential campaign and was intended to provide significant relief to nearly 43 million

American borrowers.

This ruling came down to the interpretation of the HEROES Act, which gives the Secretary of Education power to modify or waive rules for student loans during a national emergency. The majority, led by Chief Justice John Roberts, argued that while the Act permits adjustments to existing rules, it does not provide the authority for a completely new loan forgiveness program. The court upheld that the states involved in the lawsuit had the standing to challenge the program, due to potential financial harm to state-run entities like the Missouri Higher Education Loan Authority.

On the dissenting side, Justice Elena Kagan argued that the states didn't have the right to challenge the program and that the HEROES Act indeed offers broad authority to provide emergency relief to student loan borrowers.

The Supreme Court's decision highlights an ongoing tension between the branches of the U.S. government regarding the balance of power and the extent of executive authority. This development may shape future policy proposals and programs related to student loans and education financing.

Affirmative Action in College Admissions

In a landmark 6-3 decision, the Supreme Court has ruled against the use of affirmative action in college admissions, arguing that it violates the Constitution's equal protection clause. The ruling targets programs at the University of North Carolina and Harvard College and is expected to have broad implications for universities across the nation.

Chief Justice John Roberts, writing for the majority, argued that admissions programs can consider race only to explain how it influenced an applicant's character in a way that could impact the university. Broad race-based admission policies, however, were deemed non-compliant. The ruling takes a sharp turn from the court's previous support of affirmative action in the 2003 Grutter v. Bollinger case.

Justices Clarence Thomas, Samuel Alito, Neil Gorsuch, Brett Kavanaugh, and Amy Coney Barrett joined Roberts' opinion, forming a conservative majority. On the other hand, Justices Sonia Sotomayor, Elena Kagan, and Ketanji Brown Jackson dissented, warning that the decision might undo decades of progress in promoting racial diversity on campuses.

The decision does not, however, entirely close the door on considering race in college admissions. Military academies may continue to use race-conscious admissions, and the court didn't rule on efforts to increase diversity without directly taking race into account. This historic ruling marks a significant turn in educational policy and racial equality debates, and will undoubtedly shape the future of college admissions.

LGBTQ+ Impact

Each of these Supreme Court decisions could have significant implications for the LGBTQ+ community, both directly and indirectly.

1. Refusal of services based on religious beliefs: This ruling potentially enables business owners to discriminate against LGBTQ+ individuals on the basis of religious beliefs. While the specific case in question involved a Christian website designer refusing to create wedding websites for same-sex couples, the ruling could potentially be applied more broadly. This could lead to increased instances of discrimination against LGBTQ+ individuals, particularly in states without robust anti-discrimination protections.
2. Student loan forgiveness: This decision may not have a direct impact on the LGBTQ+ community specifically, but it could affect many members within the community, just like any other demographic. The Biden administration's promise to forgive student loans would have alleviated financial burden for millions of Americans, including many within the LGBTQ+ community. The Supreme Court's decision effectively limits this relief, potentially exacerbating financial strain for these individuals.
3. Affirmative action in college admissions: While this decision directly impacts race-based affirmative action policies, it could indirectly affect LGBTQ+ individuals as well. Universities may begin to reassess all forms of affirmative action, including those related to gender identity and sexual orientation, to ensure compliance with the law. This could potentially lead to a decrease in representation of LGBTQ+ students on college campuses.

Overall, the implications of these decisions for the LGBTQ+ community are far-reaching, potentially affecting access to services, financial stability, and representation in higher education. These cases underline the need for vigilance and advocacy to protect the rights and interests of the LGBTQ+ community.

Alright, honey, fasten your awigs and secure your lashes because RuPaul's Drag Race Live! is ready to twirl into its 500th gag-worthy performance this July! And guess what? They're bringing in some fierce new queens who are ready to serve you all the tea, and leave you gooped and gagged!

For the first time in herstory, our fabulous show is crossing borders and stilettos, honey, featuring international queens. We got the tartan diva herself, Lawrence Chaney from Drag Race UK Season Two, who strutted onto our stage from May 20. Nicky Doll, the fashionista from Season 12, who now keeps the French queens in check in Drag Race France, will start her Las Vegas journey on June 17. And the fiery Thai queen, Pangina Heals from UK vs The World and host of Drag Race Thailand, will set the stage ablaze starting July 15. And oh honey, don't forget about our homegrown glamazon, Bosco from Season 14, who will start her Vegas reign on July 29.

These new faces will join the beloved divas we already know and adore, including the electrifying Daya Betty and the stunning Jorgeous from Season 14, the ever-captivating Derrick Barry from Season 8 and All Stars Season 5, and the legendary dancing diva Kennedy Davenport from Season 7 and All Stars Season 3.

And, my dears, hold onto your sequins because starting June 15, our very own crowned queen, the inimitable Jaida Essence Hall from Season 12 and All Stars Season 7, will slay as host after serving us all the looks and lip syncs over the past year.

RuPaul's Drag Race Live! is the brainchild of the same creative visionaries who gave us the Emmy® Award-winning series RuPaul's Drag Race, brought to life in a way that'll make your false lashes flutter! Picture the most extra costumes, the most breathtaking sets, and performances that'll leave your wig in orbit, honey! Each night is a whole new fantasy, with six of your favorite Drag Race stars serving you a show you won't forget.

Under the glittering guidance of Mama Ru herself and the award-winning Jamal Sims, and produced by World of Wonder and Voss Events, you're in for a show-stopping spectacle. The score, darlings, is like a musical journey through Drag Race, written by the super-talented trio of RuPaul, Drag Race composer Leland, and Tom Campbell. Expect to vogue to all of RuPaul's hits from the past 14 seasons of Drag Race, as well as some new earworms that'll have you death dropping on the dance floor.

So, gird your loins and get ready for a night of pure drag eleganza extravaganza exclusively at the Flamingo Las Vegas.
